Chapter 1 by Lizabeth Sche

A small blonde Russian child was hand picked by a wealthy American Couple. They chose her because they, too, were of Russian descent. The process had been long and they had gotten used to planes. Leda and her husband, the architect, fell in love with tiny Velika.

But there was something about her that wasn't endearing at all. The time passed and she wasn't assimilating as normal. The little foreign feral lashed out in unexpected ways. The unpredictability of it was disturbing. For sitting down in her chair, another child was viciously bitten. At three, Leda was somehow able to explain it away. The older Velika got, the more the well meaning couple wished they could trade her in. Was that even a thing?
